Kingman people are rejoicing over the prospects of a new two-story hotel.

During the recent storm the thermometer registered 14 degrees below in Chino valley.

The Phoenix Republican denies that smallpox exists in that valley, but reports a case at Ash Fork.

Kingman has a case of smallpox and the Miner claims it was imported from Phoenix. J. R. Boner is the unfortunate's name.

The surveyors on the railroad line from Kingman to Temple Bar have reached valley station, and grading is expected to commence soon.

The new town hall at Chloride will be opened during the holidays. The town is said to be lively, and there is work for those who care to labor.

A Chinaman in the Solomonville jail attempted suicide by putting his head into a stove filled with blazing coals. He was arrested for being unlawfully in this country.

At Bisbee J. B. Benton, a miner, slipped and fell down a slope 100 feet, landing on top of E. H. Wittig. Benton has two ribs and his elbow broken and Wittig was only bruised.—Prospector.

Mrs. S. M. McCowan left last evening for Holbrook, and will brave the winds of the Colorado plateau in making a drive of upwards of a hundred miles in order to visit several Moqui Indian villages located north of the railroad station. Mrs. McCowan will return with a number of Moqui Indian children, who will be placed in the school north of the city. The sights and scenes around Phoenix will no doubt cause these wild little children of the desert to open their eyes wide in astonishment.—Phoenix Gazette.

Colonel McCord of the First Territorial regiment reached Phoenix Saturday and will spend the holidays with his friends. He says the regiment is in good shape. His command has been attached to the First army corps under General Wilson, and will probably go Cuba about the middle of January.

The excitement over the new find in the Graham mountains still continues, says the Phoenix Republican. The strike is reported to exceed all expectations and promises to be another bonanza similar to the Commonwealth at Pearce. A new mining town will spring up as a result, and that section will become thoroughly advertised as one of the richest mineral sections in the territory, and the mines and discoveries are there to back up the claims.

The half-soaked son of St. Michael stood on the Old Dominion corner with hands jammed down into the turrets of his overalls. He wanted to bet majestic odds that he could beat any man at anything, and concluded by showing the large crowd how far he could run his forefinger up his nose, which he deftly did clear up to his hand. Amazement filled the crowd, and the horse laugh followed fast as that hobo withdrew his hand, showing that the aforesaid finger had been sawed off years ago smack to the hand.—Globe Times.

David E. Thompson, the most active candidate for the seat of Senator Allen of Nebraska, says that he is "for the gold standard, and that fact cannot be stated with too much emphasis."

Some men save money no matter how little they make, while others don't save any, no odds how much they make.
